

Ryan Berger

Ryan Berger practices with Bull, Housser & Tupper primarily in the areas of corporate and commercial litigation with an emphasis on land, local government, and employment matters. Ryan has represented clients before all levels of court, including the British Columbia Supreme Court and Court of Appeal as well as numerous administrative tribunals. Ryan recently made submissions to the information and privacy commissioner of British Columbia.

Ryan has also been involved in cases relating to commercial transactions, property disputes, director's liability, securities, professional negligence, intellectual property, bylaw enforcement, expropriation and banking law. Ryan has acted for clients on various injunction applications.

Ryan has acquired a wide range of experience assisting and advising individuals and corporations in a variety of employment matters including corporate employment policies, employment standards, employment insurance, and wrongful dismissal actions. He has also written and presented on various employment law topics.

Ryan routinely represents local governments particularly with respect to the validity of bylaws, liability for municipal acts, and bylaw enforcement.

Since joining Bull, Housser & Tupper in 1999, Ryan has acted on behalf of individuals and a wide range of companies in various industry groups including energy, banking, forestry, and high-tech. Ryan has also represented insurers in claims ranging from owner and operator liability to personal injury and property damage.
